

Kate SHEESE teaches social psychology (Conflict and Migration Research, Organizational Psychology) at the Sigmund Freud Private University in Berlin. She is a Doctoral Candidate in critical social psychology at the Graduate Center, City University of New York. She coordinated volunteer medical aid and offering psychosocial support for volunteers on Lesbos and in Northern Greece and is currently completing a dissertation on the moral economy of international volunteer aid in the context of the refugee crisis in Greece. She works as a research associate in the research project “What helps the helpers,” which focuses on issues of staff- and self-care in organizations working with Syrian refugees in the Middle East.